Nursery and Early Years 0–6

2027 / 2028

Every journey begins with wonder.

The early years of life are a precious time. This is when trust, curiosity, and the desire to explore begin to grow. At the Keynes Institute, we believe that every child carries a unique potential within them, and that this potential must be nurtured with respect, attentive listening, and empathy.

We draw inspiration from the principles of the Montessori method and the Reggio Emilia approach, but we do not limit ourselves to a single pedagogical model. We embrace the broader vision of progressive education, choosing the most effective tools for each individual child.

Our identity is not defined by a rigid framework but by our ability to personalize pedagogy according to each child's needs.

What is the

Montessori method

The Montessori method places the child at the center of the educational process, valuing autonomy, curiosity, and learning through direct experience. The teacher observes and guides with discretion, while the environment, enriched with sensory materials, supports the natural development of independence, concentration, and responsibility.

What is the

Reggio Emilia approach

The Reggio Emilia approach is based on the idea that children learn by exploring, creating, and collaborating. The school becomes a shared space of research, where art, play, and relationships act as tools for knowledge. Teachers guide each child by valuing expression, creativity, and critical thinking.

We believe that every child carries within them all the knowledge of the world. Our task is to help this potential emerge and to guide each child as they grow freely and with awareness of their abilities.

Our spaces encourage autonomy, calm, and discovery. Educators support children in expressing their emotions and in building meaningful relationships with others. Our sensory, musical, theatrical, and motor workshops stimulate creativity, concentration, and self-confidence. Growing at the Keynes Institute means learning to understand the world and oneself.

English is part of everyday life. It is not studied; it is experienced. Teachers use it during routines, play, music, and creative activities, encouraging a natural understanding of the language.

An outdoor classroom
The large outdoor park, the pine forest, and the 10,000 square meters of nature surrounding the campus turn the school into an open-air learning environment. Children observe, touch, explore, and experiment. They grow in contact with the earth and with the changing seasons. Outdoor learning is not an exceptional activity; it is a daily dimension of school life.
